If you're sitting at your computer and itching to watch the latest Disney movie, but your (insert ISP here) Internet is spotty or simply too slow to Netflix and chill, we've brought you good news: there's a new site that allows you to watch "Frozen 2" and other great movies without hassle. HD Online Player is a free and fast way of watching movies on the internet. It doesn't bother with cable or satellite TV subscriptions. HD Online Player is incredibly straightforward, requiring no more than four steps for successful streaming: login, select video stream, click play button, wait for loading message. If you're looking for more bells and whistles than that, you might want to look elsewhere. However, there is one neat feature: the site's sidebar features a description of the movie on the left side while it shows relevant scene photos on the right. You can also check out some recent reviews of movies available on site. HD Online Player is definitely not free (unless you count watching movies online for free as "free"). However, it does offer some pretty good deals if you're new to playing movies online. You can register for free and then get two weeks of unlimited streaming at no cost. If you decide you like the service, you can upgrade to a month after that. If you want longer, HD Online Player accepts payments in bitcoins (BTC), PayPal, and Adyen. HD Online Player is still in beta mode which means it might be buggy or streaming restricted in some areas. It also doesn't support every movie yet. However, it's an interesting alternative to Netflix and other streaming services if you're looking for something you can't get at home. 8th Dec, 2015: The first day of the trial was postponed because the lawyers of the defendant wanted more time to prepare. On December 13th, court went into session again and concluded that the two accused would leave house arrest soon. The accused claim that the incident had been staged by the police to implicate them, but prosecutors insist there is no evidence of that; they said that there was clear evidence of an "attempted robbery" and a "vicious beating." The two defendants were released from detention on December 28, 2015. The final verdict in the case was not delivered yet.

The press release reads: "[T]he police investigation has revealed a large number of anomalies and discrepancies which have been raised as matters requiring investigation." In July 2012, a group of five young people beat up two shop assistants in the city center of Potsdam-Babelsberg. The police described it as an attempted robbery gone wrong.
